

THE JOURNAL OF CLINICAL PSYCHIATRY

In March, we said that at the end of 2006 we would pay special homage to our reviewers who had carried the heaviest load in 2006. Peer review, of course, is essential to a medical journal. Reviewers donate their expertise to advance knowledge in our field. Peer review improves the quality of papers and promotes scientific integrity.

The following colleagues have earned the editors' and publisher's deep respect and appreciation for their generosity of time and talent. We salute their selfless and anonymous contributions to the field of psychiatry and the patients under our care through the scholarship that is published in this journal.
